

THE CENTER FOR RESEARCH ON IMMIGRATION,
POPULATION AND PUBLIC POLICY
THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, IRVINE

SUMMER INSTITUTE ON INTERNATIONAL MIGRATION

June 27-30, 2005

The Summer Institute will consist of formal and informal discussions, seminars, training sessions and lectures designed to expose advanced graduate students and recent post doctoral scholars to recent theories and cutting-edge research in international migration and refugee studies. The emphasis will be on presentation and discussion of new ideas and unpublished research that can help to shape doctoral dissertations and postdoctoral research projects. The Institute is a collaborative project of the Center for Research on Immigration, Population and Public Policy (CRI) and other academic and research units at the University of California, Irvine (UCI) and the International Migration Program of the Social Science Research Council (SSRC).

The Institute will bring together roughly equal numbers of (1) advanced graduate students who are beginning or writing their dissertations; (2) recent PhDs (since 2001) who are revising dissertations for publication or planning new projects; and (3) senior scholars involved in innovative research and training of graduate students. The Institute includes a two-day conference (June 28-29) in which senior scholars and some junior scholars will report on their current research projects. Training modules and seminars preceding and following the conference will explore specific substantive, methodological and career development issues and provide opportunities for junior scholars to discuss their individual research with senior and other scholars in small-group and one-on-one meetings.

Conference sessions will focus on key topics of multidisciplinary significance, reflecting the interests of participating faculty and students. Examples include:

- Relationships among gender, class, race/ethnicity, and immigrant incorporation
- Second-generation immigrant mobility and integration
- Global economic and population changes and the future of international migration policies
- Migration, gender, and health
- Transnational involvements, citizenship dynamics and immigrant naturalization
- Immigrant education, language choice, spatial location and mobility, and integration patterns and policies
- Political mobilization and access to social services among immigrants

Training workshops will be conducted on such subjects as comparative and historical methods in immigration research, network-based approaches to documenting and measuring migration, getting immigration research funded and published, and job placement for immigration scholars.

Scholars invited to serve as faculty members for the Summer Institute include Richard Alba (SUNY-Albany) Frank D. Bean (UCI), Irene Bloemraad (UCB), Susan K. Applications for admission can be submitted at any time but no later than February 18, 2005. Applicants will be evaluated by CRI staff, the Institute's organizing committee, and the SSRC's International Migration Committee. Decisions will be announced by April 1. The registration fee for the Institute (covering lodging and meals) is $500. Because of budgetary limitations, attendees may be expected to cover some or all of their own travel costs. As many admittees as possible will be provided stipends to cover or help defray registration and travel expenses.

The application form can be downloaded from the CRI website at: www.cri.uci.edu.
